ENGLAND IN 1801.

The Acts are Separated by a Short Vocal Intermezzo.

TREASON AND DEATH OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

ACT I

The margin of the Hudson at West Point. Fort Putnam and the Highlands in the distance. A flag is fluttering on the fort. The orchestra represents the level of the river shore, upon which level the Chorus will enter. The characters of the drama appear on a bank or platform, slightly raised above the orchestra and Chorus. At the opening of the play Father Hudson is upon the scene. He reclines in the centre of the stage in the attitude of a river-god. The nook or couch in which he rests is situated between the two levels, as it were in an angle of the river bank. His position is such that he can, by turning his head, either watch the personages on the stage, or address the Chorus on the river margin. He is so painted and disposed as not to attract attention when the play opens, but to appear rather as a part of the scenery and decoration.

TREASON AND DEATH

First Picket. Uneasy has been my watch. Dark have been my forebodings, standing first on one foot and then on the other, through the night hours, preyed upon by visions, holding my eyelids open by my will, while strange thoughts like vultures over their carrion, wheeling about above me, assail me, tear me with their beaks and talons. Dark looms the cloud bank through the black portals of the river. The fog holds the bleared eyes of the morning. And I, stiff with watching, suspect some evil. Some foul play is in the mountains, stalking in the shadows of the dawn. Would God the releasing trumpet would blow and the flag flutter on the mountain side, and that I might find all well! General Washington is on a journey. Would God he were returned! [The sound of a bugle is heard.] Blow, blessed bugle! Blow to the rising Sun! Blow to the dayspring of Liberty, to the new nation rising calmly above the dangers that beset her dawn. Blow bugle, and scatter the night-thoughts of terror!

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

[Enter the relieving Picket.] Who goes there?

Second Picket. A friend and thy relief.

Our post is changed;
The pickets are extended up the hills,
And this low post abandoned.

First Picket. That is strange,
To leave the river front without a watch!

If we expect attack, attack must come Along the river, ——

Second Picket. Comrade, spare your brains,
And take your orders. [Exeunt Pickets.]

Father Hudson. Daughters of the sky, ye clouds of the morning, Replenishers of my veins, ye purple, wandering clouds!

And you, ye waves that lap my feet, far-traveling, restless, endlessly moving!

Thralls of the circling ocean, waves of the sea —

Attend your Father Hudson, the Ageless, the Majestic!

TREASON AND DEATH

Calling to you, his sons and daughters, summoning you at his need.

Stoop, daughters of ether, ye clouds of the mountains!

Rise, sons of the sea, most ancient retainers,

Flow towards your father's need! the River calls —

Father Hudson summons his children.

*[Enter simultaneously Chorus of Waves,
(men) on one side, and on the other,
Chorus of Clouds (women). They flock slowly into the orchestra, approaching each other, and sing as they assemble.]*

Both Choruses. Father Hudson, we are coming, we are streaming, we are foaming

From the sky and from the earth,

Down the mountains,

Through the fountains,

We are streaming, steaming forth;

We, the children of your will,

Born to serve you, and to fill

All your banks and all your margin

With the fulness of enlarging,

With the plentitude of rivers,

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

We, the generous water-givers,
Overflowing, bubbling, swelling,
Feed you with our rich upwelling.

Chorus of Men. From Monadnock and Mount Washington —

And where the haughty deer on Hudson's Bay

Sniffs the north wind, We bring you Mist.

Chorus of Women. From the rank lowlands of the Delaware,

And from the even margin of low sand,
Where the Atlantic smites the continent,
We bring you Salt.

Chorus of Men. From Sicily and the Cumæan Cave,

And from the mountains where Apollo's shafts

Whitened the hillsides once, We bring you Thought.

Chorus of Women. From the dark heart of man that scorns the light,
From Wisdom, found in Meekness through Despair,

We bring you Grief.

Both Choruses. Haste to where our father dwells!

TREASON AND DEATH

We the movers, we the rovers,
Come to your eternal dwelling.
Ancient father, we will bring News and thought of everything,
From the mossy citadels,
And the cities of the sea;
Timeworn tales of prophecy
We are bringing in our singing
To your newer Majesty.
To your destiny belated,
Young and unsophisticated,
We, the children of the ages,
Bring the solemn heritages, —
Force and Woe and Human Fate, —
Embittering your god-like state.

Bitter is life!

Bitter, bitter even to the gods, is life!

Father Hudson. Sons and daughters,
sole feeders of my life,
By these new-coming white men I am destroyed.

My feet are burned in Manhattan, my thighs in the Mohawk, While in the Adirondacks they blaze enduring ruin.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

[The leaders speak, not sing, except as otherwise noted.]

Leader of Men. Alas! little knows he that his kingdom is of nothing but of change and pain.

Leader of Women. Foolish god that must await the baptism of humanity!

Leader of Men. Father! these things must be: therefore endure. Lo, thy old trees are as grass; thy ancient summits as fresh ant-hills. Chaldea sends thee this message, father; Egypt salutes thee; Greece sends thee this song; a song of tribulation. For there is no short cut to Antiquity: therefore endure.

Father Hudson. Woe, woe, woe is me!

Leader of Men. Untutored God! Mind ragged as thy hills, thou must accept the refining pain.

Father Hudson. Woe, woe, woe is me!

Leader of Women. Peace, Father! Do not whine. Because thou hast been spared thou art soft-minded. Because thou wast spared thou art a child.

Leader of Men. When thy hills shall have been steeped for a thousand years in history, then thou wilt be patient.

Leader of Women. What thou feelest is not the axe nor the fire-brand, but the Spirit of Man moving in thy demesnes.

Leader of Men. Lo, where it comes! Lo, where the shadow falls!

[Enter Benedict Arnold. He is in the Uniform of an American General. He limps.]

Both Choruses. A light thing is man and his suffering very little.

If he can but endure for a short time, death saves him. Lo, his release cometh and his happiness is long.

✓ Fame forever follows in the steps of the just man: an unending life springs up behind him.

Children follow him: a good father's life is a lamp that burns in the heart of the son.

How short is the struggle of the greatest hero, and how long his fame! Save me from pride and from the expectation of praise from men.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Arnold. He may not come. —
What if it were a ruse to capture me? —
The whole proceeding cloaked in infamy,
And no faith in the matter?
André should be here. André is a man
Of sterling honor, and will keep his faith.
My secret's in his hand. — My change of heart Must to His Majesty have long been known,
And he will praise me for it. Civil war Knows no such thing as treason; change of sides,
The victory of reason in the heart, ✓
Makes Loyalist turn Whig. Montgomery, Richard Montgomery, was honor's darling;
And when his body fell, scaling Quebec, Down the sheer rock it left a track of light Which sped in opposition towards the stars
Bearing his fame. He was an officer
In the King's army ere he found our own.
Did conscience fret the gallant Irishman
To think what uniform was on his back

TREASON AND DEATH

When he so died? What if in that assault

I had died too, my name had ranked with his

In song and monument; unfading laurels Had shed their brazen lustre o'er our brows,

And we, like demigods, had lived forever.

Was it enough for him to scale the sky
Against the slippery adamant of Fame,
And, giving youth, give all? I have done more.

All of his early prowess was mine too:
In everything I match him; and to me

Remains the hell of glory on the Lakes,
When with my hand I stopped the British fleet, —

Stayed them a year: they dreaded to come on.

And I had done it. There remain my fights

At Ridgefield, and those shortened days
At Saratoga, when the fit came on

And I knew nothing but the act of war,

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

And victory coming down, Victory, Victory!

'Twas I that saved them! Yes, 'twas I that saved you —

Ye little wranglers with the name of war!
I beat Burgoyne, I saved the continent,
The Continental Army and the Cause, Washington, Congress, and the whole of you,

I saved ye, — saved ye, — and I had
for it —

It chokes me still to say it — had for it —
It wakes me in the night with leaping hatred, —

Out of my bed I leap to think of it, — Hitting me in my sleep the poison comes
And fangs my heart. — I had a Reprimand!

I, reprimanded by a sorry crew
Of politicians — I, I, I ——!
Thus, in my heart for sixteen months of hurt,

Burns the injustice, clamors the revenge.
No, no revenge! but justice,
Nothing but justice — I'll have justice!

TREASON AND DEATH

Both Choruses. Foolish is the man who thinks upon his wrongs though they be great. The sting is in him; the poison is in himself.

Lo, he accuses others, and the deed of his death is done with his own hand.

Father Hudson. What is the man disturbed about, my children?

Leader of Men. He is a hero and a battle-god:

The spoils and the rewards he justly won,

Others have seized, and left his haughty heart

A withered laurel.

Father Hudson. Surely it was wrong; The hero should receive the hero's meed.

Leader of Men. The gods that made him hero had left out

The drop of meekness which preserves the rest

From self-destruction.

Father Hudson. Will he kill himself?

Leader of Men. More than a suicide.—
A living death

Takes up its habitation in his heart.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Father Hudson. Little I understand, but greatly pity.
You, who have mastered all philosophy,
Can surely soothe him.

Leader of Men. None can reach the man.
He is beyond the boundaries of speech,
And goes the paths of blindness.
Would'st thou, O Father, see the invisible,
And know what agitates your placid
mind?

Father Hudson. Show me: I can receive it.

[The following Invocation is sung by the Leader of the Women in a clear contralto voice.]

Leader of Women. Spirit of the unseen habitation,
Walking distress,
Blighting presence, Nemesis, Evil,
Good-in-Darkness,
Passing from breast to breast,
Reaching easily all men,
And the vine in the orchard,
And the thick clusters of the grape,

TREASON AND DEATH

And the bending branches of the young peach trees,

When the south wind blows death upon their pride, —

O intimate undoing! In what form walk-est thou here?

Treason. [Without.]                      Who calls?

Leader of Men. One who knows thee well enough: thou need'st not hide.

[Enter Treason.]

Leader of Men. [To Father Hudson.] Behold the unsleeping fiend that lives in him!

His name is Treason.

Treason. Art thou there, Benedict?

Arnold. [Aside.]              Why not? 'Tis Fame,

Reward, wealth, power, revenge and simple justice

All at a clap. They'll make a Lord of me, —

Pacifactor of the Colonies, —

Restorer of an erring people's love

To their forgiving Sovereign. At a clap!

The key to all of this is in my hand, —

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

West Point; and in my other hand,
Sir Henry's promises, — money in sums,
To weigh the unweighed treasures I have sunk

For these damned ingrates.

Treason. Art thou there, Benedict?

Arnold. [Still aside.] They took my all,

Engulfed my freely-given wealth, paid out

For their salvation; now they count the cost,

File my accounts and give me promises,— Hopes for next year. 'Twas not in coin like that

I paid at Saratoga!

Treason. Benedict!

Arnold. Who art thou, spirit of the inner world?

I cannot see thee.

Treason. And yet you called me.

Arnold. No, I called thee not. I called to mind

My bullet-shattered thigh, and the hot thirst

Of fever. Did not Washington himself

TREASON AND DEATH

Send me the sword-knots he received from France,
And Congress vote a horse caparisoned
To bear me proudly?

Treason. Ay; they kept back that
Which all out-weighed the rest.

Arnold. My rank!
My rank!

Five brigadiers promoted over me!

Treason. They paid with compliment.

Arnold. A soldier's rank
Is, as his guiding genius in the sky,
A holy thing. That rank which I had earned

They gave to striplings.

Treason. Pay them well
for it!

Arnold. Leave me: I do desire to be alone.

Treason. Without me, Arnold, thou art not alone.

I am beside thee till thy dying breath:
When Treason leaves, he hands thee unto Death.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Arnold. It is not treason to preserve one's life
Among wild beasts; nor treason to demand
The reasonable payment of a debt;
Nor treason for the savior of a land — Listen: — There was a stripling in the town
Where I was born; and this rash vigorous boy
Seized by the nose a bull, that in a fright
Had rushed aboard a crowded ferryboat,
And held him through his plunges till he fell,
Subdued by pain. The boy for no
          reward,
But for the devil in him, did the thing.
But had he been a man, and sought
          reward,
Had he been banged about this rocking world
As I have, holding terror by the horns,
Could he not ask a pittance? — Leave me, friend.

I am exhausted, taking all the brunt

TREASON AND DEATH

And getting kicks for pay. Nay, leave me, Sir,

The argument is over. Let me rest.

[Sits down and tries to sleep.]

Treason. I'll watch beside thee.

Father Hudson. Can ye not calm him somewhat in his sleep?

Leader of Men. [To Treason.] Will you not leave the man and let him rest?

Treason. His sleep is mine. When waking let him rest.

Father Hudson. [To Treason.] This is a cruel fate ye mete him out.

Treason. Be it your province to be merciful.

Father Hudson. When will ye leave the man, thou empty ghost?

Treason. When Treason in the flesh shall come to meet him.

Both Choruses. Surely it is a good thing for a hero to die in his youth; for then is he perfect. The bark is not broken on the wand nor the neck worn by the yoke.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Surely young men are better than old; and we praise them deservedly. This man, a few years since, could endure reverse; but now he is broken and worn away: his soul bows down; he cannot hold out longer.

It is a good thing when a young hero dies; for so is he safe. His immortality is meted to him. O spare us a trial like this man's who is on the brink of great misfortune.

Arnold. [Starting up.] They have betrayed me! Who goes there?

[Enter Joshua Smith. Exit Treason.]

Joshua Smith. A friend!

Arnold. His name?

Joshua Smith. Joshua Smith. And yours?

Arnold. Arnold, my man. Good God! you startled me.

I must have slept. What news? Will André come?

Joshua Smith. He's just behind me. All is as we planned.

The British sloop-of-war hangs in the tide.

TREASON AND DEATH

The Vulture brought him, and she waits
for him

Not two miles to the south. I boarded her. With every point

Raised in your letters André is agreed;
And back of him, Sir Henry Clinton stands;

And back of him, — ye'll hear it now? —
King George!

Packt, stamped upon, agreed, and understood,

The bargain's struck. Your hand, my Lord! Sir Benedict!

Lord Ruler Benedict, The Lord Protector of the Colonies,

And Duke of, — what you will. Young André follows.

I chased ahead to find you. Put it high!
You'll put the figure high? — I'm out of breath —

Arnold. I'll put it high enough to help a friend. —

No fear of that, my lad. Go rest awhile:
Stand sentinel upon the shore below.

[Exit Smith. As he goes out he indicates Arnold to André by a gesture.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Enter André. His slender, refined, almost girlish youth is in contrast with Arnold's battle-worn, gigantic figure.]

Arnold. [Aside.] At last my arrows strike! [To André.] What! Major André!

This is a crazy meeting, — somewhat strange

After your jigging nights in Philadelphia, —

A Mischianza, where we play a masque,
And act a drama fraught with consequence

More serious than any since the Duke
Brought back King Charles. Two true-born Englishmen,

If you'll accept my hand, shall this day place

A jewel in old England's diadem,
Which some rash spirits would shake out of it.

André. Have you the papers ready?

Arnold. They are here;
The plans of all the out-posts to the dot,

And every man on duty in the Fortress.

TREASON AND DEATH

André. The general is in Hartford?

Arnold. And returns

Not for some days. Our garrison I'll post

Distributively on the distant hills;

While from the Vulture half a thousand men

Land in the darkness. Thus without a blow,

But with the magic of a countersign,

West Point becomes your own.

André. Is there some house

Or tavern, where with more deliberate
mind

We may o'erlook the papers, and make note

Of our exacter meanings?

Arnold. Close at hand,
The mansion of my agent, Joshua Smith.

André. Good, we'll go there. O
Arnold, death is nothing;

Our lives are forfeit to our country's cause.

Which of us would not quit the world in peace

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

After some act that scaled the walls of time,

And stood on the rampart?

Arnold. Right, and bravely said! I've given my life

As many times as I have mounted horse
To reconnoitre —

André. But this is different, Arnold.

Arnold. Different, ay different! it saves men's lives:

Without a drop of blood it ends a war.

André. You are a veteran, and know the feel

Of imminent death. I could die bravely, too.

Arnold. Of course you could. All fear is bookish talk

Cooked up by writers out of literature,

To give the shudder to dyspeptic girls.

Dying is easy. Come along, my friend!

A glass of port shall cure us of such fears;

Moments like this make mirth in after years.

[Exeunt Arnold and André.]

TREASON AND DEATH

Father Hudson. Is there no way to stop them; can ye not Bring pause to these excited rushing men?

Leader of Men. Pause is unknown, as to your moving waters,
That take their God-directed, downward
course,
Deaf to beseechment.

Father Hudson. 'Tis most pitiful.

Both Choruses. No, not to mirth can my voice be tuned, while these two men converse. Often their story comes to me in the night, and causes weeping.

One, the young troubadour, the boy poet, beloved by all, burning for fame;
and, in his innocence, he performs the mean work of a spy.

And the other, the old hero, seven times baptized with immortality-inaction, who betrays his country out of foolishness.

To the first, death by hanging: to the second, one and twenty years of dishonored life.

Which of them shall have most of pity? Which of them could we see

again with gladness, or greet with a gay demeanor?

The fate of the young man I deem the better; because he is young, and because death took him in his beauty.

Strange it is what souls are woven together by destiny; and out of what substance life is wrought.

All men become something incredible to themselves; for they are unwound like a cocoon, and know not which way the thread doth run.

They dance like motes in the sunbeam for a moment, and then are illumined no more. Legend takes some of them, and they become pictures; and the rest, it would seem, enter again into nothingness.

Grant me to know the desire of mine own heart beforehand; that I may not be deceived. Give me not much, but a true thing, and one that lasts forever.

[The distant sound of cannonading is heard.]

Father Hudson. Surely I hear a sound disquieting ——

TREASON AND DEATH

Leader of Men. Wait: you shall know the cause.

[Enter hurriedly, and meeting, Arnold and André on one side, Joshua Smith on the other.]

Joshua Smith. General Arnold! Major André!

Arnold. What is it? What has happened?

Joshua Smith. Colonel Livingston's redoubts on the eastern bank. He has fired on the Vulture. They are exchanging shots; and the Vulture is dropping down stream. She cannot bear the fire.

Major André. We are lost!

Arnold. No, no, no; not lost, not lost. You have only to drop down stream also. Mr. Smith goes with you; and you shall be put aboard the vessel a few miles below. Eh, Smith?

Joshua Smith. Not for the world, General! It is daylight now, and if I should be seen taking this gentleman to the Vulture, the Yankees would shoot both of us.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Arnold. Some truth in that. But what can we do?

Joshua Smith. Go the other way, General. You must give a pass to both Major André and me, allowing us to cross the river, and so on to New York. I'll go with the Major till we reach the British lines. It's a plain road to safety.

André. But my uniform ——

Arnold. It is a case for a change of coats.

André. But the countrymen are swarming in every highway ——

Joshua Smith. They are all my friends. Every rebel is my friend; — and — harkee, — every Tory is my friend — from Peekskill to New York! You'll be as safe as the General himself, — and much more comfortable, — till you reach the British Headquarters.

Arnold. [To André.] He's right, André, he's right. It's a safer way than the other when all's said. He knows every lane in the country. [More firing.] Here, take the papers. And God bless you! There's no time to lose. This pass covers all routes. The patriots know my hand and respect it. Off with you to King's Ferry, Peekskill, and White Plains! Off with you both! Smith has mounts for both of you; and you'll be in the city in twelve hours. All the words have been said: the rest is action.

André. [Shaking hands with Arnold.] Till we meet again.

Arnold. [With a gesture.] There in the fort! Sir Henry on his horse, And André like a Genius at his side, Guiding the host! That flag shall fall When next we meet: up run the British colors!

England forever! Heart, take heart, my lad!

We cannot fail. The rest is counting gains.

André. I think this exploit shall make England glad When I'm in the grave.

Arnold. Odso! Our names shall chronicle the hills,
And school-boys learn us. Go in haste, good André!

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Keep your mouth shut. Let Smith do all the talking.

These papers make you seem some Britisher,

An agent or a spy. You will be safe.

In every war are trusted underlings

Who pass from camp to camp like contraband;

Always suspected and yet always safe.

André. I like not such protection.

Must I creep

Beneath so mean a shelter, — seem a spy?

I would to Heaven my purposes were known

To every noble nature in the earth!

Arnold. Off! And the nearest way!

[Smith changes André's coat.]

Success is virtue; and we mean to win. ✓

[Exit André and Smith.]

[Aside.] If we should fail, good youth, for history's eye,

They'd write us up, — the traitor and the spy.

Would God some power to telescope the hours

TREASON AND DEATH

Were lent me now! With André in New York

I am revenged, rich, powerful, respected, everything

My enemies begrudge. It cannot fail.

O for a battle now to dry this sweat

Of simple waiting! Sure, he cannot miss!

My passes run the river up and down;

And every day some messenger of mine

Reaches New York; then why not he?

If they should take him? But they will not take him.

All these long months of waiting, —

And not a soul to speak to; I could roar,—

Sound it against the mountains, — that these peaks

Should bandy my intentions back and forth;

Or tell it to the talking cataracts

To ease my need of speech. An hour's patience,

Which seems as long as the preceding year,

And I shall know. [He sits down and falls into a contemplation; then into

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

a doze. As he falls asleep, enter quietly Treason.]

Arnold. [Speaking as if out of his sleep.] Leave me alone, Thou thing of little might!

Thou painted bogey! I am conscience-proof,

And care no more what names I may be called.

If thou canst make this hour glide more swift,

With idle chat of owls and haunted men,

I'll take thee for a gossip. Sit you there
And hide the hour-glass. There was a time

In early boyhood, when a thing like thee
Seemed horrible, but now my mouth is dry

With other terror. Thou art a cap and bells:

Play me a ditty on a tambourine.

[Starting up.] Who goes there?

[Rushes to Smith, who enters.]

Tell me that he is safe!

Within the lines,—

TREASON AND DEATH

Almost within the lines, — I left the youth.

He's safe in British hands; and by his time,

Is telling his adventures to Sir Henry.

Arnold. Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha! Is it not a joke, Joshua?

Ha, ha, ha!

This is a joke that shall run crackling through

America, like Samson's burning foxes.

Ha, ha, ha! — André is in New York!

A spasm of joy; and yet it pains my leg.

Your hand, my friend. The laughter comes again —

Ha, ha, ha! Now let them vote! Brigadier Generals

May rain on this accurséd land of pain

As fast as Congress spawns them! Now, ye rats!

Who shall squirm last, I ask ye?

[To Smith.] Safe, you say?

You saw him with the British?

Smith. Not quite so;

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

But at their outposts.

Arnold. It will take a day Before I can believe it. I am drunk
With the intoxication of revenge,
Sweeter than wine. A day of jubilee Shall follow all our torments, Joshua Smith.

Out on ye, pack of curs! I have ye now,

Where ye'll not yelp so freely. — Ha, ha, ha —

Ha, ha, ha, ha! — And God I thank thee,
too.

Justice is in the world.

Help me to the fortress. Mercy, how it pains!

Justice! Revenge! And, Joshua, — what a joke!

[Exeunt Arnold and Smith.]

Father Hudson. My heart is moved with sorrow: the sins of men enter into me and I am constrained. Why was this man chosen for suffering; and what balm is there for his seed?

Both Choruses. Fear God and seek

TREASON AND DEATH

not thine own advantage. Pluck not the grape thyself; for who knows whether it be intended for thee?

I will weep freely and lift up my voice for the sorrows of men. There is none that shall comfort me.

Come, Father, let us weep together and add our tears to thy streams; for so only can the medicine of this grief flow down to the children of men.

INTERMEZZO

Father Hudson. Is it finished?

Leader of Men. No; it is begun.

Father Hudson. His pain enters into me. I must endure these things. Woe is me that ever I was born of the brooks or received by the meadows! The pains of new birth get hold on me, and I see that life is sorrow. Why could ye not let me alone, ye pangs of knowledge; or go by on the other side, ye piercings of understanding? Must I be bound up forever with sin, and feel the hand of unevenness on my loins?

Both Choruses. So it is with all creatures of a deep spirit. They are caught with the net; they are frozen in the ice of God; they are very helpless, and cry for relief day and night.

Accept thy pains, for they are good. Reason not against fate but lay down thy will in earnest.

TREASON AND DEATH

Father Hudson. Will the man come again?

Leader of Men. Once more shalt thou see him, and remember him forever. Lo, now he comes as the wounded lion, as the tiger bereft of his prey and wounded by the hunter. [Enter Arnold, a pistol in one hand, a letter clutched in the other. During this speech he crosses the stage.] His plot has failed and his iniquity is as a broken toy. Wrecked is all his life. He flees like a robber from his own land. Hills look your last upon Benedict! Ye Highlands, filled with clouds, and ye little streams that jet along the crags, this is your general. Will he remember you in his dreams, think you, or find himself back among you in his reveries? In his lone island, in his long years of silence, ye will return to him. Bid him adieu without bitterness, thou rocky castle! For his punishment shall be within himself day by day. [Exit Arnold.] Behold, [Shades his eyes with his hand as if observing Arnold] he is on the shore; his barge of eight oars obeys the signal; he stands in the prow; the rowers smite the water. With fury they row, for he commands them; with fury and terrible ire they row, for they fear the man. He has drawn a white handkerchief from his breast, though his pistol never leaves his hand. The prow of the British sloop of war looms above his barge. They see his signal. They are letting down the gangway. They are taking him up into the British vessel.

Chorus of Men. So down the torrent of infamy,
So into the bosom of Hell,
O Vulture, thou bearest him!

Chorus of Women. Naught brings he in hand to his captors;
Naught but the coin of his soul;
Empty-handed goeth he.

Chorus of Men. The great cheater
here is cheated;
The great traitor here betrayed:
Where is his bargain?

Chorus of Women. Bare life he saves
by the purchase,
Merely the breath of life;

TREASON AND DEATH

Merely the fountain of pain.

Chorus of Men. Yea, out of the lips of aversion,

Yea, out of the hand of contempt,

He receiveth his price.

Chorus of Women. Pride is the hero's undoing,

Pride is the sin of the great.

Lo, he licketh the crumbs!

Both Choruses. So down the torrent
of infamy,

So into the bosom of Hell;

O Vulture, thou bearest him!

Father Hudson. Is all treason punished like this among men?

Leader of Men. Father, thou askest things no man can answer.

Father Hudson. If these things could be known, what man would follow his own desires? Fear overtaketh me in thinking of them. I thank the gods that my channel is laid, I cannot change it.
The man seems to me like one who should place a lake on a hilltop and cry to it, Stay there! He hath wrestled against thunder. He would lift the rocks with his back; and he lies crushed beneath them. Can he not repent? Shall he never find out that fire is hot? Must he die still unapprised of his own foolishness?

Leader of Men. The future is a hard thing to know.

Father Hudson. Are there not charms that open mountain sides,
And show what shall come forth?

Leader of Men. All things to come
Are come already, — save the power to see them.

Father Hudson. Would I might know
the ending of that man, Whose fate and story clinging to my name

Do make me human!

Leader of Men. Human was his end,
And very moving. Wouldst thou wait awhile,

Or see the story now?

Father Hudson. Now, now, my son!

Invocation. [Sung in contralto voice, as before, by the Leader of Women.]

Storm-shadowed, precipitous valley,

TREASON AND DEATH

And ye threatening towers of stone that hold back the mountains, Letting the dark stream pass; Storm King, and Donderberg, homes of reverberant thunder;
Thou steep theatre, where his story trod
its stage,
And where the circling thought of it returns
With ever profounder, ever accumulating echoes,
Calling to Humanity, compelling attention, provoking the unexpected tear, —
Open yet once again your treasured legend;
Out of the encrusted box, the precious parchment,
Out of the vestment-chambers, the hallowed rags.

[As the verse now changes its form, the music also slightly changes character.]

Lo, now, our holiday calls on the past for its lessons,
Lo, while the flame of the frost-bite fingers the dale,

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Lo, in the lambent blaze of autumnal quiescence,

Flows Father Hudson, at peace, through his populous vale.

Fruit trees garland his margins, — vines,
and the brazen

Hillocks of billowy rye o'er the undu-lous deep

Stretch to the Berkshires, proclaiming the conquering season;

Dash on the Catskills, repulsed by the envious steep.

Woe, royal river! In grief I gaze on thy harvest,

Anxious to me my thought as thy riches unroll.

Mortal, beware lest in riotous plenty thou starvest!

Give me the fruits of the spirit, the songs of the soul.

Father Hudson. A sweet voice but sad, — trembling sad.

Leader of Men. Hush, it invokes the craggy wilderness,

TREASON AND DEATH

And seeks an entrance for its piercing cry.

Leader of Women. [Sings. The music again changing with the metre.]

Give up the scene, give up, ye sordid rocks,

The last of Arnold in his English home,
Which in your bosom lives for evermore,
A deathless picture; England cast it out
Not being English, and it shivered on,
Coiling about the world, till it was caught
And locked into your rocky fastnesses
Where it lives ever; and your mountain ribs

ACT II

[The centre of the stage slowly opens, disclosing a sitting-room. A writing-table covered with letters. Somewhere in the foreground a sofa or low couch. An engraved portrait of George III. Arnold is sitting at the table, but his arm-chair is turned away. He is in a profound reverie, gazing at the floor. He is dressed in the uniform of a British officer. His hair is gray and his face worn. At the back of the stage at one side of the door, sits Treason, somewhat in the attitude of a sheriff's officer keeping guard.]

Treason. [To Arnold.] What are you muttering, comrade? Go to sleep!
And yet sleep not too sound; there's work ahead!

With all the world against us. What of that?

We ne'er were beaten yet. Get money first:

TREASON AND DEATH

A fortune in your fist. With honest luck,
Your hand against the world! But money
first.

[Aside.] He breaks apace, and I await each day

The knock of Death —

[Knocking.] No, no, not yet, Sir Death!

There's life in him and, mayhap, years of grief.

Leave me to tousele him. He's strong as hemp

And bears his ragging well.

[More knocking.] Not yet, not yet!

[Enter Death.]

Treason. You are unjust to come before the time.

Death. The moment and myself are on the stroke.

Treason. Thou deemest that this man is soon to die?

Death. Death is already in him.

Treason. Yea, his body. —
His mind is brighter than it was before.

Death. My shadow lights his mind;
but it is Death.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Treason. How hast thou entered him without a struggle?

Death. The struggle was thy work.

Treason. Give me some moments.

Death. [Pointing to the door with great dignity.] The man is mine. Hence!
Silence! Obey!

[Exit Treason. Death takes Treason's place by the door.]

Arnold. [Waking.] They deny me the opportunity of honorable death.
This is the twentieth year of sodden waiting.

Fighting by land and sea and soldier's work,

As hot as heart could wish, — boy generals, —

Wars on all hands, in Holland, France, and Spain,

With military honors falling thick; —

And I, a Tantalus set in a lake of thirst,

Up to my neck in battles all about,

Without the power to reach them!

[*Enter Mrs. Arnold. She has a youthful face, and her hair is prematurely white.
She passes by Death without seeing him.*

TREASON AND DEATH

A gesture of surprise and pity as she sees Arnold. She kisses him on his forehead, and sits down next him on a lower chair.]

Mrs. Arnold. Surely, my husband you have not been forth!

After the sullen fever you have had

'Twas most unwise. —

[Pause.]

You have been grieved, and wear the ashen look.

Arnold. Age, and the chafing of a few stern thoughts.

Mrs. Arnold. Have I not earned the right to know them?

Arnold. Indeed, thou hast! An angel from the sky

Accepting the bad bargain of a man, Could not have found a worse. You took me up

A battered piece of ordnance, broken in spirit,

Accursed to myself and to my kind;
And underneath me thou hast held an arm

Sustaining as the seraph's upward look Askance against Apollyon.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Mrs. Arnold. Benedict!
You shall not talk so. — Arnold. Next, your mother's heart
Became the mother to my three grown boys,
Giving them such devotion and such love
As rarely flows from out a mother's hope
To her own children.
Mrs. Arnold. Benedict, your words Cut me like knives. Why, why this catalogue?
Arnold. Something compels me. —
Mrs. Arnold. Where have you been?
Has some insulting taunt
Cast by a coward in a public place Where you could not resent it, stung your patience?
These are the pebbles small men throw at great.
Arnold. No. 'Tis the season for my wounds to ache;
And with them aches the rest. —
Mrs. Arnold. Where have you been?
Arnold. Three hours in his Lordship's ante-room.

TREASON AND DEATH

Mrs. Arnold. The War Office? And what has been decided?

Arnold. I could not see his Lordship.
Three hours late.

They sent me word his Lordship was not in.

It is the iteration wears me down.

Year after year, — year after leaden
year, —

Kicking my heels in England's ante-rooms, Where proud men pass me by: and now and then

I catch a glimpse of some American, —

A former pal, a former enemy; —

It is the same, both pal and enemy

Give me a fit of trembling. 'Twas not so;

Yet as the years decline our nerves grow sick:

I dread it more and more.

Mrs. Arnold. O Benedict,

This is the mood that kills us. Have we not

A thousand times resolved it, made all plain?

✓ You in your right of conscience chose a course

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Beside your King, recanting many errors,
And following the only light you knew.
The king himself accepted your return
And raised you with his hand.

Arnold. [Very quietly.] I was a traitor.

Mrs. Arnold. [With great vehemence.]
No, no, no!

You were the noblest hero of them all!

Arnold. And now they do not trust
me.

Mrs. Arnold. Is there a soldier in the British Isles

That has a list of battles like your own?

Arnold. It may be not.

Mrs. Arnold. Then make allowances for jealousy.

To Englishmen, their battles are a sport,
With every post of danger dearly prized,
Like the crack stations in the shooting field, —

Never enough for all. They bribe and jockey, —

Knife their own brothers to get near the spoil.

And would they not repel a foreigner, —

TREASON AND DEATH

One they had cause to envy? Englishmen

Are very unforgiving of defeat.

It is your glory, the impediment:

So gluttonous are soldiers of reward —

So sporting-keen are Englishmen for fame.

Arnold. It may be so.

Mrs. Arnold. Your temperament is of colossal mould,

And sees too simply.

Arnold. I was a traitor.

Mrs. Arnold. Are you a man to take the common talk,

And be its dupe? How often have we spoke

Of the returning wars that shall restore

The lusted fame and power that is your due?

Belated are they; yet to reason's eye

Certain to come. God keeps such eminence

As in your soul exists, to show mankind

The height of heroes.

Arnold. Error: it is gone out.

Mrs. Arnold. Never such light goes out! No smoke of the world —

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Sin, error, evil, anguish, touch it not.
It burns forever with ethereal force
Beyond pollution. I can see your soul;
And never has its aspect been more bright

Than on this morn.

Arnold. You are not used to talk to me like this.

Mrs. Arnold. Nor you to tell me that you are a traitor.

Arnold. Perhaps some change is coming over us.

Mrs. Arnold. It may be freedom from the load of thought.

Arnold. It may be death.

[She kneels by him in silent anguish.]

Both Choruses. Surely truth is not born except through pain; and the long delay increaseth it.

It is a happiness for a young man to see his error. But for an old, only death remains. He hath no strength for new things. Let him die in his old ways, yea, though they be evil.

Very sad is repentance when it is too late; when the blight has fallen, and no fruit cometh thereafter. Very sad is the grief of an old man. I cannot lay hold of it. There is no comfort to be given him, for he knoweth the world.

TREASON AND DEATH

Father Hudson. What causes the man to see these things now?

Leader of Men. What causes thy waters to pour down in March, or the leaf upon your banks to sprout in April? It is because the season fulfils itself; and what is to be, cometh forth, and no one may stop it.

Both Choruses. Now may I say that no man is made of iron, or lives beyond the stroke of reproach.

The arrows strike him when he shows it not. The scornful glance of a friend reaches his quick. He suffers very much.

In his last days he betrayeth the havoc. In his fall his wounds are laid bare. The secret of his heart becomes an open book, and a child may read it.

Arnold. I would not speak; but the sea-bottom of me

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Is being raked to the surface. Hold you still:

You are the daughter of good Tory folk,
And common talk on King and loyalty
Had in your ears a meaning and a place Quite strange to mine. For my Rhode Island stock,

Grown far afield, and long acclimated,
Had dropped all meanings for the name of King,

Of Church, of mother country. Such appeals

Were like a tinsel fringe of superstition,
Alien imposture. It was all a fraud.

[He walks across the room, takes the portrait of George III and throws it, not savagely, but with deliberate contempt, into the corner, where it lies shattered. Mrs. Arnold remains on her knees and raises her hands in helpless supplication.]

There lies the dog that bit me. Now desist:

It is not easy; yet it must come out.

A letter that I wrote to this same King,
Or to his secretary, George Germain, — Imploring favors for my villainy —

TREASON AND DEATH

If I appear unmanned, it's physical,
And needs no moment's thought — The letter's here,

[Takes a letter from his pocket.]

And through its hell of shame as through a gate

I see Elysian fields, peopled with comrades.

Mrs. Arnold. [Aside.] God have mercy upon us!

Arnold. I'll not read all, but phrases
here and there.

[Arnold reads from the letter with some difficulty and with pauses — but very distinctly.]

“... conscious of the rectitude of my intentions. . . . that I may be restored to the favor of my most Gracious Sovereign — . . . cheerfully cast myself at his feet imploring his Royal Grace and Protection. . . . the unalterable attachment to the Person, Family, and Interests of my Sovereign, and to the Glory of his reign. — . . .”

[He throws the letter quietly on the table.
To Mrs. Arnold.]

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

West Point I did deliberately betray:
I begged the post intending to betray it. ✓
All was conceived before I married you.

Mrs. Arnold. [As before.] God have mercy upon us!

Arnold. They must pet me then,
To show that loyal treason reaps reward. ✓
'Twas policy, not liking for my face,
That made King George so sweet.
What in this world of savage Englishmen, Strange monsters that they are, have you and I Found of a country? Friends, good hearts and true;
But alien as the mountains of the moon,
More unrelated than the Polander,
Are Englishmen to us. They are a race,
A selfish, brawling family of hounds,
Holding a secret contract on each fang,
'For us,' 'for us,' 'for us.' They'll fawn about;
But when the prey's divided; — Keep away!
I have some beef about me and bear up Against an insolence as basely set

TREASON AND DEATH

As mine own infamy; yet I have been Edged to the outer cliff. I have been weak,
And played too much the lackey. What am I
In this waste, empty, cruel, land of England,
Save an old castaway, — a buccaneer, —
The hull of derelict Ambition, —
Without a mast or spar, the rudder gone,
A danger to mankind!

[He sits down upon the couch. Mrs. Arnold throws herself on his knees and sobs convulsively.]

Both Choruses. Who shall praise a woman, save He that made her, save God that understandeth all things?

I will sing a song of woman, and magnify the wife of a man's soul. His goodness she has discerned when no man else can find it: his crimes are known to her, yet is he not in them: she seeketh his soul among many.

She divineth salvation out of hell; and bringeth water from the desert. Who shall praise a woman save He that made her; save God who understandeth all things?

Father Hudson. Sorrow is erecting a tomb for this man in my heart. Whence comes the peculiar pang, my children? Whence comes this pity that will not be denied, but bedews your faces?

Leader of Men. From the greatness of the man, comes it Father; and from his ignorance of himself.

Father Hudson. Is it true that he was a hero?

Leader of Men. Such a hero as antiquity can show, towering, magnificent, made of cloud and thunder, made of lightning and glory, a god among fighting men, a Hector or Mars appearing from the bosom of the sky on the day of battle, bringing victory.

No one had seen his like before; nor since him has one like him come. To his country he gave the column of his strength. In her need he sustained her. He planted her high. His name became a bulwark: many times gave he his strength. Yea, his life also grudged he not.

Father Hudson. Would he had died in his glory, would he had been struck down and died long ago! So had he been spared this humiliation. On my shores he belongs: the memory of his infamy and of his fame covers me: Saratoga knew him, and West Point acknowledges him. No tomb shall he have; yet shall the hills remember him. His glory is eaten up in shame; and yet shall mercy say her word. See, he begins again. What new anguish will he reveal?

Arnold. [He has now recovered his composure.] Where are the boys? If death be soon to come I'd gladly see them. Is it not most strange
That one possessing nothing to bequeath
Of all those things men covet for their sons,
Should have so many? For what rank or name,
Honor or fatherland, or worldly goods,

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

All that men sweat for, — have I here to leave?

Country I've none. My land was over there

Where my first honors sprouted. And my boys

Are foreigners, — young Englishmen — brought up

Upon King George's bounty. When he bought

My loyalty he took my children, too.

Ben, he is dead, my eldest, — he was killed

In the West Indies, fighting for the King.
Sir Grenville Temple brought me back his sword.

(God bless him for it!) Send and fetch down Ben's sword.

[Mrs. Arnold rings. Enter servant. She speaks to servant in dumb-show. Exit servant.]

Richard and Henry, your two foster sons, Settled in Canada on royal grants.

And our four sons, — your Edward, Robert, George

And little William, — are all pensioners,

TREASON AND DEATH

Assisted servants of the English crown.
Where are they? I must see them. It is strange
That I, remembering them, can yet not think

Quite plainly where they are.

Mrs. Arnold. My dearest Lord There's fever in your cheek. The day's distress

Has worked some downfall to your shattered brain,

You're very sick. —

Arnold. The boys, I asked about —

Are they away, or here?

Mrs. Arnold. The elder three At school and college, and our little Will Just home from school.

Arnold. I pray you let him come;

My blessings on them all must fall
through him;

Nor will they wait: the passage of an hour

May find me gone. — Stay; there is yet one son.

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Mrs. Arnold. No, Benedict, you have described them all.

Arnold. Ay, but there is one, born in Canada,

My natural son, whose mother is no more;

And yet my son, — and brother to the rest,

And ever at my cost I've brought him up.

I cannot leave him out. He is of age

And elder than your boys.

Mrs. Arnold. A son of yours —

Arnold. A natural son of mine, whose bringing up

Is at my charge. I cannot cut him off.

Though of my name I scanted him the curse,

I ever sent him help.

[Gives her a paper.]

Mrs. Arnold. You have done right To count him in; and I accept him,

And will provide a portion like the rest

Though at my children's cost.

Arnold. Send William here:

TREASON AND DEATH

The time grows short.

Mrs. Arnold. [To servant.] Send Master William here.

[Exit servant. Enter William Arnold, a boy of eight.]

Arnold. William, you are a soldier: —
This old sword

Was once your brother Ben's, — my eldest boy.

He served his God, his Country, and his King,

And found a soldier's death. It is a record

We may be proud of in the family.

You and your brothers, Edward, George,
and Robert,

Are dedicated soldiers to the King.

England, to all of you, is generous

To overflowing: See ye pay her back

In overflowing measure with your lives.

You are a soldier, Sir, and understand

The duties of a soldier; when you grow

A little older you will read, perhaps,

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Something about your father; for his name

Is written on a page of history;

You cannot miss it. When you find it
there,

Remember only all the soldier part;

The soldier part he leaves you: all the rest

Was something suffered, that was meant
for him

But not for you. There, go my boy;
good-bye.

You must to all your brothers tell this news,

And say I blessed them. They will understand,

Each in his measure, on the appointed day,

My message to them. See you bear it safe

It is a charge of honor and becomes you.

[Arnold kisses the little boy, and gives him the sword with which he walks toward the door. The child feels that something very serious is happening, although he does not entirely understand it. When near the

TREASON AND DEATH

door he turns, runs back and embraces the old man again; and then exit.]

Both Choruses. Now will I say that children add to life a glory not belonging to it; and a pang beyond the pain of this world.

In them is pain; in their birth, danger; and in their tender years, a care; thereafter, sorrow or joy, too keen, too keen, too poignant, too sharp, — cutting the heart in twain.

Happy are they who know it not. Happy are the childless; for the great sufferings are kept from them. Blessed are they: I will praise and envy them always.

One adieu, —

The worst, remains; and then, — I know not what, — some relaxation

Or sweetness of the grave.

[To Mrs. Arnold.] Good-bye, great soul;
I leave thee sorrows, many-pointed cares,

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

The stress of growing sons and straightening means;

Yet one great blackness passes from your life,

Unshadowing you all. I see ye stand
Safe in the port, — as on a margent shore Clustered in sunlight, — while my bark moves on.

I am not of ye; I am far away
And long ago; one of those Argonauts
That in the western seas, with sturdy oar, Urging their venturesome and sacred bark,

Steered a new course, — a band, a brotherhood, —

And, though a Judas, I was one of them.
Get me my uniform. I wore it last
On that last day on which my sun went down.

And I, descending now to seek the sun,
Must put it on.

Mrs. Arnold. Dear Benedict, your uniform?

You have it on.

Arnold. No, no! not this, not this!
Ring; call a servant!

TREASON AND DEATH

Mrs. Arnold. [Rings. To servant.] Whate'er he asks for, get it quickly for
him,

But make no questions.

[Arnold speaks to servant in dumb-show.
Exit servant.]

Arnold. The very coat I did the treason in,
By accident preserved, and then, — and then —

I could not cast it off: it clung to me —
Waiting this day. It lay there like a dog, Patient against a master's drunkenness,
Watching his face.

[Enter servant with the coat of the American uniform, and the sword-knots.]

Thou one unbroken link with all the men
I walked with on the mountain heights of youth,

When glory shone, and trumpets heralded,
And drums were rolling! We were patriots then,

Warren, and Putnam, Lincoln, Knox, and Schuyler,

Morgan, and Stark, Montgomery, Sullivan —

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

And scores of faces burnished by the winds,

That shone with glory —

[He takes off the coat of his British uniform, the servant assisting, and puts on the coat of his old American uniform.]

Never weep, dear wife.

I seek the truth you teach me. It is thus

Your thoughts do guide me; — and I must go back

To where I lost the way.

[Showing sword-knots.] That ornament Washington gave me, — with such words of praise

As must preserve it till the judgment day Against corruption. Should I meet that man,

Will his reluctant and offended shade
Pass sadly on? Or will he greet me
there, —

There, but not here. There, there, but never here!

On toward that shadowy spot I blindly go,

Claiming the past.

TREASON AND DEATH

[He lies down on the couch, and Mrs. Arnold kneels by his side. Exit Death.]

Both Choruses. Surely the past must be allowed to all men; and not to him alone. What good there was in us cannot be lost.

God forgets not the virtue of those who have failed; and why should man seek to judge them? Verily all courage is immortal: the man himself cannot kill it.

Lo, what great things are done through even bad men; and this man had in him much goodness.

[A pause. Distant military music. Four young boys dressed in white, and bearing tall spears with little banners attached to the tips, enter and stand each at one corner of the couch. The arrangement suggests a medieval church tomb, of which Mrs. Arnold's kneeling figure forms a part.]

OF BENEDICT ARNOLD

Both Choruses. Not on the shores of America —

Not on our shuddering strand,
Can Arnold's tomb be laid.

Nor in his land of illusions —
Britain's contemptuous Isle,
Can stone be added to stone.

Yet in a corner of Memory,
Hallowed by terrible pain,
Stand the stones of his grave.

There, his trophies of victory,
Piled in marshal array,
Gorgeous, perennial —

Spoils, heroic, tumultuous,
Emblems, worthy remembrance —
Marking a hero's grave.

TREASON AND DEATH

John's, Ridgefield, Bemis Heights, Saratoga, etc. They circle the group, and pile the wreaths about the couch, then stand about in symmetry.]

Father Hudson. Enough, my children, I understand. Leave me awhile. Let there be no loud praises. Go silently.

[A dead march is played. Father Hudson resumes the plastic, immobile, and almost invisible attitude which he occupied at the opening of the play. The Choruses file silently out, one on each side of the orchestra.]
